If your Washington state protection order is ending in 90 days or less, and you still need it, you can ask a judge to renew or extend it so that it protects you and/or your children for longer. (Forms and instructions)

Community organizations can help! If you've experienced domestic violence, harassment, stalking, or sexual assault, or the threat of any of these, get help from your local domestic violence shelter or sexual assault center. Shelters provide safety planning, temporary shelter, legal advocacy, counseling, and other services.

Will I have to pay to ask to renew my protection order?

No, you don't have to pay a filing fee. But there may be copying fees and fees for service (delivering the papers to the restrained person), if the judge doesn't order law enforcement to serve the restrained person for you.

"Judge" here refers to judges and court commissioners.

How easy or hard is it to renew a protection order?

It's easiest if you don't want to make any changes to your protection order and the restrained person doesn't respond or show up at a court hearing to fight the renewal. But even if the restrained person does try to fight the renewal, they must prove that there's been a real change in circumstances and that they won't abuse or harm you in the future. This can be hard for them to do.

How long can I get the protection order renewed for?

The judge can renew a protection order for one year or longer. The judge can also make a protection order permanent.

What should I put in the motion form?

Put facts such as how long it's been since you got the protection order, if the restrained person has violated the protection order or harmed or abused anyone not protected by the order, if the restrained person has been convicted of any crime since you got the order, and if the restrained person has a continuing problem with alcohol or drug abuse. This isn't a complete list. You can read more things to tell the judge at the state law: RCW 7.105.405\(5\) (<http://app.leg.wa.gov/RCW/default.aspx?cite=7.105.405>).

Could the judge say no?

Maybe. The judge could turn down your request to renew a protection order if the restrained person proves that there's been a real change in circumstances and they won't abuse or harm you in the future. Under state law, there are certain reasons the judge can't use to refuse to renew a protection order.

My protection order kept the other parent away from our children. What happens to the children if I can't renew it?

At the renewal hearing, if the judge refuses to renew your protection order, you must follow any other court orders you have about parenting (custody and visitation). If there are no other parenting orders, then you and the other parent will have equal rights to time with the children. You may want to start a new case to get a Parenting Plan.

- Example 1: You had a Parenting Plan that gave the other parent every other weekend time with the children, but then you got a Protection Order that says all contact must be supervised. Your Protection Order is expiring, and the judge denied your motion to renew it. You must go back to following the Parenting Plan when the Protection Order expires. You may want to petition to change your parenting plan.
- Example 2: Your Protection Order is the only court order about parenting time. It says that the restrained person's contact with the children must be supervised. Your Protection Order is expiring, and the judge denied your motion to renew it. After your Protection Order expires, there will be no rules in place about who the children live with, when they see the other parent, and which parent can make major decisions for them. You may want to get a Parenting Plan.

If it's been a long time since the children have had contact with the other parent, you can ask the judge to consider if they should do reunification therapy (<https://www.psychologytoday.com/us/therapy-types/reunification-therapy>) with the children. You can ask the judge to put in the Denial Order if reunification therapy should happen and why. You may still have to get or change a Parenting Plan to require it. Any such therapy provider should be made aware of the other parent's history of domestic violence and should have training and experience in the dynamics of intimate partner violence.

My protection order covers my child. What happens when they turn 18?

Your protection order stops covering that child when they turn 18. But the child can use the renewal process to keep getting protection after age 18, as early as 90 days before it expires or as late as 1 year after it expires. It's easier to renew a protection order than to file for a new one. The judge should renew a protection order, unless the restrained person proves that there's been a real change in circumstances and that they won't abuse or harm you in the future.

2. Step-by-step

1. Fill out the forms.
2. Attach any supporting evidence to your motion. Everything must be single sided on regular size paper. Organize your attachments so the judge can understand them. Add labels and dates to pictures, texts or emails.

Some confidential documents should be filed separately under a sealed cover sheet. This keeps them out of the public court file. You must still serve them on the other party. Examples: paystubs, tax returns, bank statements, benefit statements, medical or treatment records, special education records, confidential evaluations or reports.

If you're afraid for your safety or the children's safety, you can block out information identifying your location on the copies you file with the court and give the other party.

3. File your forms with the court clerk. You can bring your completed forms in person to the clerk's office of the same Washington state court where you originally got your protection order. Or you can call the clerk first to ask if it's possible to file electronically.
4. Ask the clerk for help scheduling a renewal hearing. If your protection order is going to expire before the hearing can be held, ask the clerk to help you get a judge to sign your Order Setting Hearing on Renewal and Extending Order until Hearing. If you don't need an extension order, you still need to schedule a hearing.
5. Service. The court papers must be delivered to (must be served on) the restrained person as soon as possible. If you got an Order Setting Hearing on Renewal and Extending Order until Hearing, it will say who should serve the papers. Usually, the judge orders law enforcement to serve. Even if you didn't need the extension order, you can ask law enforcement to serve.

- If law enforcement will be serving, the clerk's office will send them a service packet with copies of all the documents to be served.
  - If you'll be making private arrangements for service, the clerk's office will give you the service packet. You must find a process server or another adult to serve the packet on the restrained person.
6. File proof of service. Whoever serves the restrained person must fill out written proof of service (also called a “return of service” or “affidavit of service”). If law enforcement is serving, they'll fill out and file this form. Otherwise, the server may give you the completed form for you to file with the court clerk, or they can file it themselves.
7. Go to the renewal hearing. The judge decides here whether to renew or make changes to your protection order.

3. Get ready for hearing

Read our tips to get ready for trial. The hearing is like a very short trial. However, witnesses don't usually testify at protection order hearings. Witnesses can file a declaration form describing what they saw or heard.

You must file witness declarations and any other documents you want the judge to consider with the court clerk and have the restrained person served with a copy before the hearing date. It's best to file these at the same time as your petition, if you can.

If the restrained person doesn't get these copies beforehand, the judge may reschedule the hearing to give everyone time to read them. The reverse is also true: the restrained person must provide you with copies of anything they file. You have the same right to ask at the hearing for more time to review copies of anything served on you at the last minute.

Make some notes to yourself about the main points to make when it's your turn to talk at the full hearing. You may have no more than 5 minutes to speak.

If your hearing is in person, get to the courthouse early. If possible, don't bring your children.

If your hearing is by phone or video, follow these tips for phone and video hearings.

4. Hearing issues

If you know beforehand that you can't make the hearing, contact the court clerk about rescheduling. Otherwise, if you simply don't go to your hearing, the judge will dismiss your motion, and your protection order will expire when it was originally supposed to.

Even if the restrained person hasn't been served 5 court days before your hearing, you must still go to the hearing. This is especially true if the judge had to temporarily extend your protection order until the hearing date. In that situation, you must ask the judge to further extend the protection order long enough to allow time for service.

Even if the restrained person didn't get 5 court days' notice but received the order, you can contact the police to enforce the order if there are any violations.

5. At the hearing

If the restrained person doesn't show up but was properly served at least 5 court days before the hearing, the judge can go ahead without the restrained person. You'll get your protection order renewed.

If the restrained person shows up for the hearing, the judge will let each of you speak, and then decide.

If the judge asks you a question, try to answer it directly. Do not interrupt the judge.

You may need to wait for the judge to write up the order. The clerk may give you a copy right away. If not, ask how you can get a copy.

6. What if I'm denied?

A judge who won't renew your protection order must put their reasons in a written Denial Order. Under state law, the judge can't use any of these reasons to refuse to renew a protection order:

- The restrained person hasn't violated the protection order.
- You and/or the restrained person are under age 18.
- You didn't report to law enforcement the conduct that led you to get the protection order, or any violations of the protection order.
- You also have a no-contact order or a restraining order against the restrained person in a criminal or family law case.
- You could get a court order in a different case, such as a family law case, that would give you what a protection order renewal would give you.
- It's been some time since the last incident that led you to get the protection order.
- The restrained person no longer lives near you.

If a judge refuses to renew a protection order for any of those reasons, it may be legally incorrect. Try to talk to a lawyer right away.

You can try to fight the Denial Order

Within 10 days after the entry of the order you can ask for reconsideration or revision. If the 10th day falls on a weekend or judicial holiday, your deadline is the next judicial day.

- Ask for reconsideration if the decision was legally incorrect or you have newly discovered evidence.
- Ask for revision if your case was decided by a court commissioner (not a judge), and you want a judge to review the same evidence.

File your motion for reconsideration or revision with the court clerk.

You can file an appeal within 30 days after entry of the order. You have the right to a transcript or recording of the hearing.

If new evidence would support issuing a protection order, you can refile a petition for a protection order at any time.

The restrained person might get their weapons back

Weapons might be returned after the order expires unless there's some other reason the restrained person can't have guns. Contact the law enforcement agency listed on the Order to Surrender Weapons. Ask them to alert you if weapons are returned.

Protected minor turned 18

If a protection order covered you as a child and you've now turned age 18, you can use the renewal process to get your own protection order. You can file to renew the protection order as early as 90 days before it expires or as late as 1 year after it expires.

There's a separate form for this. Use the Petition and Motion to Renew Protection Order – Protected Minor (PO 052) instead of the Motion to Renew (PO 050), above.
